

Pick how you're feeling. Talk to someone who gets it.

MoodOrbit does one thing. You pick how you're feeling, tap once, and you're talking to one real person who feels something similar — right now, on your phone. Voice or text, your choice. Anonymous: no profiles, no photos, no follower counts. Nothing to keep up with, nobody to impress. When the conversation ends, it's done.

What it's for

The 9pm slump

The kids are in bed, the house is quiet, and there's nobody to say it out loud to.

Starting over

After a separation, a move, a job change — when your old circle isn't the right one to call.

A day that went wrong

You don't want advice. You want five minutes of being heard by someone who isn't involved.

Good news, no audience

Something went right and there's nobody around to be pleased with you about it.

What you get

- Matched on your mood — the app looks for someone feeling the same thing, at the same energy, right now.
- Voice calls with one matched person — up to 15 minutes, free.
- Text chat if you'd rather write. Both of you can agree to switch to voice.
- MoodOrbit hour at 9pm, when everyone shows up at once so nobody waits alone.
- A private journal of how you've been, visible only to you.
- Save the people you click with and talk again.
- A nudge when someone's waiting — if a person is looking for a conversation and nobody is around, your phone lets you know.
- Someone to talk to at 3am — an AI companion when no human is free.

Why it feels safe

- You are anonymous. A made-up name like TidyBirch287. No photo, ever.
- Nothing is recorded. Calls aren't taped, texts aren't stored — we couldn't show anyone your conversation if we tried.
- You end it whenever you want, with one tap and no explanation.
- Block and report are one tap away, and reports are read by a person.
- Adults only, and every account is verified by phone or Google sign-in.
- Crisis help is always on screen — real helplines for your country.

MoodOrbit is a feel-good app for everyday moments — it is not therapy, counselling or a crisis service. If you or someone else is in danger, contact your local emergency number.

How to use it

From download to talking in about two minutes

1 Install and sign in Search MoodOrbit in the Play Store, or scan the code on page 1. Sign in with your phone number or your Google account — it's only used to keep the app free of fake accounts. You'll pick a made-up name; nobody sees your real one.

2 Say how you feel

Tap I Need to Talk, then pick the word that fits — happy, lonely, anxious, grateful. Choose your energy level, and whether you want to talk, listen, or either. That's all we use to find your match.

3 Get matched

MoodOrbit looks for someone whose mood fits yours and who is free right now. It usually takes seconds. You'll see their made-up name and how they're feeling — then a countdown from 3, and you're connected.

4 Talk

Up to 15 minutes, voice only — no camera, ever. If you're stuck for words the app suggests an opener. End Call is always there, and you never owe anyone an explanation for using it.

5 Or type instead

Not in the mood to speak? Choose I want to write and have the same conversation by text. If you both feel like it, one tap turns it into a voice call — and if not, it stays text.

6 See how you've been

Afterwards you can note how you feel. Over a few weeks the Journal quietly shows you your own pattern — which days were hard, which were lighter. Only you can see it.

Worth knowing

- The busiest hour is 9pm — everyone is nudged to open the app then, so that's when you get matched fastest.
- You can leave at any second — no confirmation, no reason, no awkwardness. Block and report are one tap away.
- Nobody around? Tap Remind me in 30 minutes and it'll tell you when it's busier.
- Three free conversations a day, reset every morning. No card, no trial trap.
